A few days since the mate of an outward bound ship, standing upon the wharf, at the north end, was accorded by a big, two-fisted Irishnian, who was directed in the sea toggery of a regular out and out "black ball linest."

Pat, evidently, had been told by some wag that he would experience no trouble in shipping for an able seamen, on board of some ship, if he would but dress like a sailor. In accordance with such advice he had donned the cast-sway "tarpaulin and jumper" of some sailor, and as far as dress was concerned, he was as salt as the Bay of Biscay boliced down to a quart. his dress to him was what the lion's skin was to the jackass.
